As mentioned in the About page, I've been living abroad for the most part of my professional life. I've tried several different part-time jobs over and holdover jobs during this time but my background/training would be Freight Forwarding and English Teaching. (CV attached below.) These are the industries I have worked in, for the longest and consistent amount of time. Although these jobs are interesting, I feel important to challenge myself, learn something new and start to build a career for the future, which is why I've decided to start working towards joining the IT and Web Industries. Overview

Web Development

As mentioned in the About page, I've been living abroad for the most part of my professional life. I've tried several different part-time jobs over and holdover jobs during this time but my Id say my background/training would be Freight Forwarding and English Teaching. (CV attached below.) These are the industries I have worked in, for the longest and consistent amount of time. Although these jobs are interesting, I feel important to challenge myself, learn something new and start to build a career for the future, which is why I've decided to start working towards joining the IT and Web Industries. I've always had a keen interest in computers and the technical side of them and looking forward to getting further knowledge on them. Throughout my career, I've gained a lot of experience which has helped me develop a strong work ethic. I'm easy-going, willing to listen and happy to work in a team or by myself.

My decision to start this journey was made 2 years ago. During this time I've tried online learning schools and a Foundations course at another bootcamp in Tokyo. I've enjoyed this journey so far but feel I'm just getting bits and pieces of knowledge and the industry, which led to my decision to enrol in Coder Academy Australia. Already a few weeks in, I feel like I've expanded my knowledge base knowledge of HTML/CSS and have learned very standard industry practices like Git and Terminal. I'm also looking forward to expanding on previously learned languages such as JavaScript and Python. Please see below as example of what I've worked on previously. Below is a website I have been using to study Javascript. Its themed around Karate and is a lot of fun. Its called codewars.com
